Description

If you look out of the window of apartment 69D you see across a row of houses that were photographed on June 18, 2011. The row of houses are on the opposite of Residence Copes. The houses are shown in a rain puddle on the side walk in front of the building. The photographer could not have imagined this Hague Mirror would ever hang in the building next to that puddle. The photographer went to the city exactly for this photo. After a rainstorm the weather suddenly became radiantly beautiful. Such weather conditions do not occur often. It rains enough, but it is not that common the sun shines full and bright afterwards. Maybe only five times a year or so. For a beautiful picture, the puddle has to be in the shade and the reflecting building in the sun. And there should not be too much wind. There are some days a photographer encounters nothing beautiful, but this day the photographer was very lucky. The baked cobblestones and the puddle on the side walk formed the right framework for the monumental buildings that can be found on the avenue Copes van Cattenburg. De avenue Copes van Cattenburg was built in 1870 and is part of the beautiful Archipel area. Most buildings in that area are built in the nineteenth and early twentieth century in electric or neo-Renaissance style. Similarly to the row houses on the photo.
